New café off and roasting downtown

Fire Roasted Coffee and Habitual Chocolate. Owner Dave Cook talks location, future — and chocolate

MARK SPOWART

Good things come to those who wait, as they say.

And in this case, those good things are coming in the form of Fire Roasted Coffee and Habitual Chocolate at Dave Cook's newest venture — Fire Roasted Café.

The downtown eatery opened Friday at King and Talbot streets about six months after Cook started renovating the storefront, and tantalizing taste buds.

Long before he started roasting coffee beans in a frying pan at home, he attended culinary school in Calgary and became a chef. The café is his first venture back into food service as an owner.

"I am really looking forward to it," Cook said. "This is a very compact location, and we are going to be doing a lot of things in one location, so it will be easy for me to move between management and helping out with the baking or chocolate."

Cook is starting off with a light menu of sandwiches, soups, salads, fresh baked goods and, of course, offerings from his Habitual Chocolate label. Once he receives a liquor license, Cook will be carrying craft beers from Forked River and Silversmith brewery along with wines produced in the Lake Erie region. Labatt will also be on the menu for the traditionalists.

The café has seating for 50 with 32 seats inside and an additional 16 seats outside in a combination of "bistro" and bench seating.

Child porn investigation

Brother, sister charged after cyber-crime probe

A brother and sister are facing charges after a lengthy London police cyber-crime unit investigation into child pornography.

Jillian Fischer, 22, and Jonathan Fischer, 20, were charged Wednesday after police searched a Westminster Avenue residence as part of an investigation that started June 5.

Police allege Jillian Fischer was pretending to be a man while chatting with a young girl on the Internet.

The charges against Jonathan Fischer stem from drugs and weapons found in the residence, police said.

Along with finding evidence of child porn, officers seized oxycodone, marijuana and weapons, including brass knuckles.

Combined, the drugs are valued at about $270, police said.

Jillian Fischer is charged with possession of child pornography, four counts of telecommunication with a person believed to be under 18 for a criminal purpose and possession of controlled substances.

She's the second London woman this year to face such charges.

Prior to 2013, police had not charged a woman with luring since 2008.

Jonathan Fischer is charged with three counts of unlicenced person possessing a prohibited weapon and drug possession.

New Music Fest. Bringing a taste of Europe here

London is adding another music festival to its calendar. This time, a big part of the focus will be on local musicians.

Aptly called New Music Fest, the event is slated for Nov. 1 to 2 at several venues.

It's the creation of Paul Fairley and will feature a 50/50 mix of local music and independent national or international acts.

"The idea came to me on my flight back to Canada after attending school in Scotland studying commercial music," said Fairley, who lives in Barrie.

After attending the In the City festival in Manchester, England, Fairley became interested in indie music culture and how fans were seeking out emerging bands.

"It really inspired me, and I loved the idea of a multi-venue, cutting-edge festival and saw it was a necessary thing for the local and indie music industry," he said.

Once he returned to Canada, Fairley started the Barrie New Music Fest in 2007. Within a couple of years he had landed Budweiser as a title sponsor, added additional cities and created his own mini-tour.

As the events grew, he slowly included additional cities and decided about a year ago to add London.

Fairley plans to work with local musicians and local promoters who want to be involved.

"In Barrie, it is estimated their show generates around $400,000 in revenue just for the city as well as the impact on local artists who we help get into touring markets," Fairley said.

Waterloo region. Farmers' market rises from ashes following devastating fire

A renowned farmers' market near Waterloo that was levelled by a Monday fire has partially reopened.

The outdoor portion of St. Jacobs Market, as well as one of its buildings, was back in business Thursday, with more than 300 vendors expected to set up shop. The market is a hot spot for the local community and tourists across southwestern Ontario.

The market's main building was gutted by a fire officials say began in its southeast corner. Ontario Fire Marshal spokesman Lonnie Schubert said investigators haven't identified what caused the fire but are looking at several "potential ignition sources."

Thinking of Lac-Mégantic. Meeting with first responders, rail companies, mayor focuses on prevention

scott.taylor@metronews.ca

Dangerous materials transported by rail through London at all hours of the day could trigger a disaster of immense proportions if a derailment occurred.

The tragedy in Lac-Mégantic two months ago was a stark illustration of that and the message wasn't lost on local officials.

Mayor Joe Fontana, the city's police and fire chiefs, representatives of CN and CP railways along with those from Transport Canada got together Thursday to ensure everything is being done to prevent a similar accident in London.

"We're in the busiest corridor in North America," Fontana said after the meeting. "Over 100 trains come through our city every day. That's a pretty big number, but I think after today we understand each other's roles a lot more.

"We understand what needs to be done proactively at the front end, as well in the event of an emergency."

Fontana said it's crucial for everyone involved to share ideas and strategies face to face.

"We called this (meeting) because not only are we prepared for an emergency, and I believe we are, but more importantly, (to ask) how can we work more co-operatively together as partners in terms of prevention … to make sure a tragedy such as Lac-Mégantic can't happen?"

He described some of the cargo that trains haul through the city as "dangerous stuff" and said Lac-Mégantic highlights the need to ensure the proper infrastructure is in place to prevent an emergency.

Police Chief Brad Duncan cited long hours of training and planning as clear indications that first responders are prepared for anything that happens.

"If we have a derailment in our town, with our emergency operations control group … I'm very confident that we would be able to respond accordingly," he said.

Fire Chief John Kobarda praised the rail companies for their preparedness.

"It's all about prevention," he said. "We need to prevent it, and that was the theme of today's session."

Train tidbits

- Trains cannot stop quickly. An average freight train travelling at 100 kilometres per hour requires about two kilometres to stop.
- The majority of car-train collisions on highways occur when the train is travelling less than 50 kilometres per hour.

Gas plant scandal prompts Liberal training

Coming up

- Hearings by the legislature's justice committee, which is investigating the cancelled gas plants, will resume Tuesday after taking a one-week break.

Under fire for illegally deleted emails in the $585-million scandal over cancelled power plants, Ontario's minority Liberal government is touting a new training program teaching political staff how to archive documents.

The mandatory seminars follow two scathing reports from Information and Privacy Commissioner Ann Cavoukian — the first of which slammed the government for destroying important records of the cancellations before the 2011 election.

A follow-up report last month flatly stated bureaucrats in the Ministry of Government Services "misled" Cavoukian by saying some email accounts could not be retrieved but were subsequently found, fuelling opposition accusations the government was feebly trying to cover its tracks.

The training — helping political staff decide which documents should be saved and which can be discarded — was developed with help from Cavoukian's office and the provincial integrity commissioner.

Expand animal shelter, plan says

A plan being floated to council would see the animal shelter on Pine Valley Boulevard expanded to provide space for enhanced veterinary care. The expansion would include an area for surgeries and an isolation area for animals that are sick or injured.

The proposal comes as the city looks to expand animal-welfare services and is recommending renewal of a $2.9-million-a-year deal with Urban Animal Management. METRO

City staff predict $4.3M surplus

City staff is cautiously predicting a $4.3 million budget surplus at the end of 2013. The prediction is based on where things stood through June 30. At that point, the city had spent about 47 per cent of the annual budget.

According to a report headed to a council committee next week, a big portion of the year-end surplus would come as the result of a one-time, $3.7-million payout from the province. METRO

Police were searching Thursday for a man who robbed an east London bank.

A lone man entered the Scotiabank at 1880 Dundas St. at about 10 a.m. and demanded cash, police at the scene said. He then fled on foot with an undisclosed amount of money.

No weapon was seen, and no one was injured.

Obama presses world leaders to support strike against Syria

G20 summit. The U.S. president runs into opposition to military action from Russia, China and the European Union

U.S. President Barack Obama pressed fellow world leaders on Thursday to support a U.S.-led strike on Syria, but he ran into opposition from Russia, China and even the EU — which condemned the recent chemical weapons attack in Bashar Assad's country but declared it too soon for military action.

"The use of chemical weapons in Syria is not only a tragedy but also a violation of international law that must be addressed," Obama insisted during a meeting with Japanese Prime Minister Shinzo Abe at the G20 summit, where he mostly made his case behind the scenes.

China's G20 delegation spokesman, Qin Gang, was among those who countered, saying: "War isn't the fundamental way to solve problems in Syria."

The prospect of military action against Syria overshadowed the global growth agenda at the two-day summit, which opened Thursday in the Russian city of St. Petersberg. Leaders did, however, discuss the crisis during a dinner hosted by Russian President Vladimir Putin, one of the Syrian government's strongest supporters.

While Obama has long called for the ouster of Assad, the chemical weapons attack near Damascus two weeks ago pushed the U.S. to the brink of military action for the first time during Syria's civil war. The U.S. position on Syria has increased tensions with Putin, one of Assad's most important backers. Putin has blocked efforts at the UN to take action and has questioned intelligence reports U.S. officials say link the chemical weapon deployment to the Syrian leader.

Chemical warfare?

U.K.: New evidence gas used

U.K. scientists have found new evidence that poison gas was used last month outside the Syrian capital of Damascus, U.K. Prime Minister David Cameron said Thursday.

In an interview with the BBC, Cameron said that the evidence being examined "further shows the use of chemical weapons in that Damascus suburb." The BBC's account of the interview did not make clear whether the tests had determined who was responsible for the chemical strike — a critical question facing world leaders as they gather in Russia to debate a response to the Aug. 21 attacks. PM Harper takes firm stand on Syria, debt-reduction

Prime Minister Stephen Harper is taking a firm position on two controversial issues at this year's G20 summit, with little hope of achieving a wider consensus with his fellow leaders on either front.

With Foreign Affairs Minister John Baird and Finance Minister Jim Flaherty in tow to hammer home his messages, Harper made it clear that a military strike is necessary against Syria; and that countries should be setting hard targets for reducing their debts, as Canada is now doing.

U.S. to scale back stimulus gradually: Russian official

Russia's finance minister says U.S. President Barack Obama assured G20 leaders that the U.S. will be scaling back its stimulus policy. The prospect of the U.S. Federal Reserve scaling back its policy of quantitative easing has dampened hopes of a global recovery and has already caused weakness in emerging market currencies.

Anton Siluanov told reporters that in response to other world leaders' concerns, Obama said that the U.S. will be withdrawing stimulus "gradually".

Tax offensive sets sights on Google, Amazon

Russia's finance minister says that G20 leaders have agreed on a plan to take on multinational companies who tuck away their profits in offshore jurisdictions.

Speaking after Thursday's first G20 session, Anton Siluanov said that leaders are indignant over the policies of cross-border giants like Google and Amazon, who "make money in one country" but pay lower taxes elsewhere. The G20 leaders agreed on a plan that would prevent these companies from using loopholes and tax havens, Siluanov said.

Human-rights activists stage individual protests at G20

Spaced out along St. Petersburg's main thoroughfare, about a dozen activists staged protests to attract the attention of leaders of the world's biggest economies to human-rights violations in Russia.

Activist Iosiph Skakovsky said they held individual protests because mass protests are often banned or disrupted by police.

Activist Natalya Tsymbalova was protesting "discrimination of sexual minorities, falsification of elections, pressure on NGOs, violation of the freedom of public assembly."

80 students handed sensitivity training for pro-rape chant

Halifax. Chant has been taught to first-years at Saint Mary's University for years

RUTH DAVENPORT
Metro in Halifax

The president of the Saint Mary's University Student Association says he knew about and participated in a chant glorifying the rape of underage girls — but will not step down.

"We want to be some serious advocates about sexual assault and we want to turn this around and educate more students," said Jared Perry during a news conference in Halifax Thursday.

Eighty student leaders and three SMUSA executive members will undergo sensitivity training after a video surfaced of them leading hundreds of first-year students in the chant, which spells out the word "young" with lines like, "'u' is for underage, 'n' is for no consent."

Perry said the chant has been taught to frosh for "years." He said he and the other leaders just didn't think about the message.

"It's more about the rhyme and the chant behind it," he said. "As odd as it sounds, we didn't see the message … we now realize that it's extremely serious and we don't want it to happen any more."

Perry has resigned as chair of the Students Nova Scotia group, but will not give up the office of SMUSA president.

"It's definitely the biggest mistake I've made throughout my university career and probably my life," he said.

Opportunity for change?

"I feel that there's an opportunity here to make some changes and I really do want to turn this around."

Jared Perry, president of the Saint Mary's University Student Association

Saint Mary's president Dr. Colin Dodds called the chant "completely inexcusable."

"My colleagues and I were shocked by this incident and are deeply sorry that our students, and now the community at large, were exposed to disturbing sexually charged material," he said in a statement. "I am taking measures to ensure it does not happen in the future."

Exotic pets. Crocodile, python, other reptiles seized in Ottawa home

An Ottawa-area man may be facing bylaw charges after 14 reptiles, including several exotic varieties, were discovered by Gatineau police as they executed a search warrant at his home Thursday following complaints from neighbours.

"Spectacled caimans do get big enough to cause very, very serious injuries," said Matthew Korhonen, curator of Little Ray's Reptile Zoo in Ottawa, which has taken in the haul of animals.

Police searched the home Thursday after animal control officers were denied entry by a 24-year-old man who was later seen leaving the home with a large snake in his hands, police said.

Once inside, they found the spectacled caiman, three boa constrictors, a 91-inch-long Burmese python, five non-venomous snakes, an iguana, a bearded dragon and a local variety of snapping turtle that is illegal to hold in captivity.

The man potentially faces charges under Gatineau bylaws for possession of non-venomous reptiles that could pose a danger, possession of exotic reptiles not contained in a terrarium and possession of a pit bull without a licence. The dog has been handed over to the SPCA. Each violation comes with a ticket of more than $100.

"Burmese pythons can get big enough to hurt someone who is small," said Korhonen, adding that the spectacled caiman crocodile should not be sold to "anybody ever."

The animals are too big and too costly to own, he said of the Central and South American species. "People see a six-inch baby and think it would be cool to own," he said. "They've never seen a six-foot one try to take your arm off. But unfortunately it's really, really common."

Zimmerman's wife filing for divorce after pleading guilty to perjury

George Zimmerman's wife is filing for divorce.

Attorney Kelly Sims confirmed Thursday that his client, Shellie Zimmerman, is divorcing her husband of six years.

Shellie Zimmerman pleaded guilty last week to a misdemeanour for lying during a bail hearing after her husband's arrest for the fatal shooting of 17-year-old Trayvon Martin last year.

A day after the plea, she told ABC's Good Morning America she wasn't sure she wanted to stay married. ABC first reported the divorce Thursday.

She said the couple lived "like gypsies" after George Zimmerman was released on bail, spending nights in a 20-foot trailer in the woods.

Her husband wasn't in court with her last week as she was sentenced to a year's probation and 100 hours of community service. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Yahoo unveils first major logo revamp

Branding. Whimsical purple emblem hasn't been changed for most of firm's 18-year history

Yahoo has adopted a new logo for the first time since shortly after the Internet company's founding 18 years ago.

The redesigned look is part of a makeover that Yahoo Inc. has been undergoing since the Sunnyvale, Calif., company hired Google executive Marissa Mayer to become Yahoo's CEO 14 months ago.

Mayer has already spruced up Yahoo's front page, email and Flickr photo-sharing service, as well as engineered a series of acquisitions aimed at attracting more traffic on mobile devices. The shopping spree has been highlighted by Yahoo's $1.1-billion US purchase of Tumblr, an Internet blogging service where the company rolled out its new logo.

"We wanted a logo that stayed true to our roots (whimsical, purple, with an exclamation point) yet embraced the evolution of our products," a statement on the website said.

Yahoo has spent the past 30 days showing some of the proposed logos that Mayer and other executives cast aside. The revision is the first time that Yahoo has made a significant change to its logo since a few tweaks shortly after co-founders Jerry Yang and David Filo incorporated the company in 1995.

Mayer's overhaul of Yahoo has attracted a lot of attention, but so far it hasn't provided a significant lift to the company's revenue.

Privacy. Google seeks to dismiss U.S. lawsuit over Gmail scanning

Google's attorneys say their long-running practice of electronically scanning the contents of people's Gmail accounts to help sell ads is legal, and are asking a U.S. federal judge to dismiss a lawsuit that seeks to stop the practice.

In court records filed in advance of a federal hearing Thursday in San Jose, Calif., Google argues that "all users of email must necessarily expect that their emails will be subject to automated processing."

The class action lawsuit, filed in May, says Google "unlawfully opens up, reads, and acquires the content of people's private email messages" in violation of California's privacy laws and federal wiretapping statutes.

The lawsuit notes that the company even scans messages sent to any of the 425 million active Gmail users from non-Gmail users who never agreed to the company's terms.

Google has repeatedly described how it targets its advertising based on words that show up in Gmail messages.

For example, the company says if someone has received a lot of messages about photography or cameras then it might display an advertisement from a local camera store. Google says the process is fully automated, "and no humans read your email." Privacy advocates have long questioned the practice. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Mobile payments. PayPal meets brick-and-mortar

PayPal is updating its mobile app, adding features such as the ability to place an order ahead of time and pay with it while at the restaurant table.

The move comes as eBay Inc.'s subsidiary works to expand beyond processing payments for online purchases. It's been trying to service transactions at brick-and-mortar stores as the two worlds continue to meld.

The free app is available for iPhones and Android phones. It includes a feature called Shop. With it, people can find nearby stores and restaurants that take PayPal payments. People can use their phones to pay for things.

Forrester Research analyst Denee Carrington called the update the next step in mobile payments, though she noted that some features — such as the ability to use PayPal to pay the cheque at a restaurant — could take people some time to get used to.

Corruption suspects gave $2M to federal political parties

Dozens of suspects accused of corruption at Quebec's municipal and provincial levels have also been involved in national politics, donating more than $2 million to federal parties, an investigation by The Canadian Press has revealed.

An analysis involving all 102 individuals charged after sweeps by Quebec's anti-corruption police squad shows that nearly half — 45 of them — made registered legal contributions to federal parties from 1993 to 2011. The actual extent of their connections to federal politics, however, may never be known.

A public inquiry in Quebec has heard explosive allegations about illegal political financing, bid-rigging, collusion and Mafia ties in the province's construction industry, but it doesn't have a mandate to explore whether such activities have occurred in the federal realm. THE CANADIAN PRESS

3 We Day. This inspiring day from Free the Children and Me to We about empowering youth on social issues takes place in cities throughout Canada. There's an event on Sept. 20 in Toronto. The star power involved includes Demi Lovato, the Jonas Brothers, Martin Luther King III, Serena Ryder and Col. Chris Hadfield. There is also a Vancouver event Oct. 18. The overriding message: Be engaged, be the change. Anyone can make a difference.

4 The Social. This topical Canadian news show debuted this week on CTV and its approach to social media is bang on. The show connects to viewers via real time tweeting @TheSocialCTV. Many of the show's topics and discussions arise there, and the hosts read tweets in real time from viewers. Great use of social media to fuel a show and engage with an audience.

5 @KirstineStewart. She is the head of Twitter Canada (former CBC exec), and as such is an active tweeter, tweeting and RT-ing interesting tidbits showing how people are leveraging the power of Twitter in the business, media and pop culture worlds. Unfortunately, as her Twitter bio says, she doesn't "know how to get you 'verified'...." I just sucked up for no reason.

6 Milos Raonic. Monday night, TSN2 carried a terrific five set match between Canada's Milos Raonic and Richard Gasquet at the U.S. Open. What made the coverage extra special was that it was commentary free. Surreal but beautiful in letting the players and sounds of the fans dictate the drama. The lesson: sports announcers need to dial it down in close matches. Let the action speak.

7 Oh, Canada. Naomi Harris, a Canadian photographer based in New York, released a stunning series of portrait photographs she captured during a five month cross-Canada journey. From cricket players in Stanley Park, B.C., to a Sioux Valley Pow Wow in Sioux Valley, Man., to a Demolition Derby in Weyburn, Sask., check out the beautiful pics of our country's diverse culture at naomiharris.com.

8 Critter bites Mike Fisher. Carrie Underwood posted videos on Vine of her NHL player hubby picking up a chipmunk with his bare hand after it snuck into their home, and then the bite marks it left on him. This is proof celebs really are just like us. Well maybe not, we'd use a bucket and gloves.

9 WatchABC.com. The future of TV is online. Three ABC comedies — The Goldbergs, Trophy Wife and Back in the Game — will debut on WatchABC.com (from Sept. 3 to 17) before they hit TV screens.

10 Twitter etiquette. I always find it amusing when someone complains about what you're tweeting about. Comedian @rickygervais summed it up best this week when he tweeted: "Following someone on Twitter & complaining about their tweets is like secretly stalking someone & telling them they're going the wrong way."

Animal vows never to play badminton again

This prickly mess was the result of a hedgehog becoming tangled in a badminton net in a British garden. The tangle blocked the mammal's spines and mouth. Luckily, the animal was rescued. METRO

Hedgehog facts

Get to know the neighbour in your garden.

- Spines. Adults have between 5,000 to 7,000 quills on their back and tail.
- Family. A cousin of the shrew, but unrelated to similar-looking porcupines.

Advice

"This serves as a reminder for people who use garden sports sets to ensure they are safely removed and stored. Had we not been called the hedgehog would not have survived."

Dudley Clements
Royal Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals (RSPCA)

Prickly number

The percentage by which the hedgehog population is estimated to have shrunk this century in Britain, leading to fears of extinction. Actions such as Hedgehog Awareness Week have been launched in the hope of reversing this trend.

Summer's winding down and with that means summer holidays are grinding to a halt, too. If you didn't get out of town as much as you hoped, the Interwebs are here to quench that travel thirst. In lieu of hitting the Trans-Canada in that VW van, we bring you Instagram accounts from across Canada (so you can get a peek and see where you want to hit next summer).

They don't call it "beautiful B.C." for nothing. Scott Rankin makes Vancouver look kind of like paradise (or at least like Canada's real ocean playground).

@Ontariotravel:
Predictably, the province's tourism getup is pushing out pics of the province; unpredictably, they're actually really great.

@visitnovascotia:
From pics of beaches and bridges to lighthouses and lakes, Nova Scotia's tourism account shows the best of the province (though please pardon some of the cliché imagery).

RE: Not All Teachers Created Equal; He Says column, published Sept. 5

I was very offended by a statement that Mr. Mazerolle stated in his article.

I find it ironic that he's speaking out against labelling, or other forms of prejudgment, however, he is critiquing my profession of ten years, my parents livelihood and the reason I'm debt free after a honorary psychology degree and going to become an environmental technologist.

My parents never "sling or spitballed" any teacher because of their insinuated lack of education. As a matter of fact, they've worked their way up from youth to franchise a store, and now they are paying for my education, because they know and respect teachers and education.

They also respect hard work and dedication to their job. So before Mr. Mazerolle belittles cashiers maybe he should realize, that last time I checked, cashiers are people, too.

SCENE 2

Synopsis

In Vin Diesel's fourth outing as the mercenary-turned-enforcer, he has been double-crossed and left for dead. "I don't know how many times I've been crossed off the list," he mumbles in a voice-over, "but this ain't nothing new." He spends his days battling aliens until not one, but two teams of bounty hunters land on the planet. The first team, lead by Santana (Jordi Mollà) wants Riddick dead so they can collect the ransom. The other team, headed by Boss Johns (Matt Nable) wants him alive for questioning. As the bounty hunters bang heads, Riddick plans a wild scheme of vengeance and escape from this desolate planet.

Reel Guys

RICHARD CROUSE AND MARK BRESLIN

Riddick is heavy on the filters and crazy creatures, but light on entertainment. CONTRIBUTED

Just plain Riddickulous

Riddick. Tawdry graphics, cheesy dialogue and gratuitous nudity doesn't even make this film campy fun

Richard: Mark, Riddick should have been titled Riddickulous. With its cheap effects, cheesy dialogue, gratuitous nudity and testosterone-laced characters, it might provide midnight movie-style nostalgia for anyone who grew up on direct-to-video sci-fi flicks in the 1980s. Anyone else might want to go back to the original movie in this series, Pitch Black, and enjoy a movie that actually kinda makes sense. This is the rare movie that is actually better when the star isn't in it. What did you think?

Mark: The movie has a look, I have to admit, and it kept me connected to the film for the first 40 minutes. The director has never met a filter he didn't like. But Vin Diesel didn't bother me as much as the movie itself. It's so grim and ugly it's hard to watch. And after the first 40, kind of boring, which is unforgivable.

RC: I agree with you about the stark look of the film. There's no eye candy, although some of the creatures are pretty cool, but I'm on the opposite page regarding Diesel's solo act for the first 40 minutes. I didn't think this movie worked at all until he gave up the Survivorman act and the bounty hunters showed up. Then, for my money, it became a typical bad movie instead of a surreally bad film.

MB: And didn't that part of the film feel to you like a video game right down to the tawdry graphics? And if it's silly you're looking for, I'm glad to see that women in outer space are still wearing eyeliner.

RC: You want silly? How about fending off a vicious dog-creature by starting an impromptu game of fetch? Or maybe using words like "jamoke" in the far distant future. If the movie had embraced its silliness instead of taking itself so seriously in all the wrong ways, I might have enjoyed it more!

MB: I might have enjoyed it more if it were a completely different movie. I like Diesel in his Fast and Furious franchise, so maybe this flick needed some car races to soup it up. As I watched it, I gave it some grudging admiration for the purity of its grim vision. Then there's an eleventh hour act of gratuitous kindness that makes no sense at all and ruins what little the film has going for it.

Mumblecore methods work well with Drinking Buddies

NED EHRBAR
Metro World News in Hollywood

Joe Swanberg GETTY IMAGES

For some actors, director Joe Swanberg's mostly improvised method can be daunting, but others — like his Drinking Buddies cast of Olivia Wilde, Ron Livingston, Anna Kendrick and Jake Johnson — find it exhilarating. Swanberg gives us some insight into his writing and editing process and his stringent "no yelling" policy for himself on set.

How much of this was improvised and how much did you plot out?
The plot was pretty heavily figured out before we shot anything. The size of the movie and the infrastructure involved meant that we had to schedule it, we had to lock down locations. We had to know what the story was going to be and even what the scenes were going to be in a vague way. Being my own editor allows me to be a little more open as a director. Editing becomes a lot of the writing process.

How do you go about pitching this sort of process to actors?
It's a very conversational pitch. I talk about where the themes came from, how I relate to the story, what I'm pulling from my own life and I feel like that's a nice lead-in to discussing how their own stories can enter into the picture. The goal ultimately is to have it be a kind of collaborative performing and writing process, so I'm looking for people who are open to sharing and talking about those kinds of things — relationship things.

Did you find some actors just didn't quite go for that?
Sure. I met a lot of great actors, people whose work I admire, who just either weren't excited by the improv process or for one reason or another thematically this wasn't a story they were interested in telling right now. I mean, there's a lot of reasons why somebody would or wouldn't want to do this movie, but I think people were all curious.

Do you think being an actor helped with that conversation?
A little bit, maybe. Hopefully it helps me as a director. I certainly feel like it makes me a better communicator and it makes me more empathetic to that experience.

Comedy

Sightseers

Director. Ben Wheatley

Stars. Alice Lowe, Steve Oram

The outcasts in Sightseers aren't very likeable characters and filmmaker Ben Wheatley probably prefers it that way. As new lovers Chris and Tina travel across England in their caravan, quaint tourist stops become upstaged by dog theft, vehicular homicide and eventually senseless serial killings against condescending citizens. As commentary about class warfare goes, it's oddly imaginative but the gag still wears out by the end of the film. STEVE GOW

News just in ... Johansson engaged to journalist

Scarlett Johansson ALL IMAGES GETTY

Scarlett Johansson is engaged to her journalist boyfriend, Romain Dauriac, the actress' rep confirms to E! News, saying that the pair are "very happy" with the development. "They haven't chosen a wedding date yet," the rep says. Johansson and Dauriac first went public with their romance last November and have kept things pretty low-key since. This will be Johansson's second marriage after her 2011 divorce from Ryan Reynolds.

OUR TAKE ON THE WORLD OF CELEBRITIES

The Word

Where in the world is Lamar Odom?

THE WORD
Dorothy Robinson
scene@metronews.ca

Just what is going on with Lamar Odom? The Internet was abuzz on Thursday with the news that troubled Kardashian man piece Lamar Odom had checked himself into rehab in order to save his marriage to Kourtney Kardashian. It hasn't been the best month for Odom — numerous reports have surfaced that he cheated on Kourtney with a stripper and he's come clean about his addiction to Oxycontin, Ambien and cocaine — but not before he was arrested for a DUI last week in California (so maybe add "alcohol" to that list, Lamar?). But then TMZ.com came out with the bombshell that Odom is nowhere near a rehab centre and Kourtney has heard nothing from him. So where-oh-where is Odom? Who knows? If only someone would create a show called Keeping up with the Kardashians so we could keep tabs.

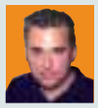
Liquid Assets

King of global grapes



LIQUID ASSETS
Peter Rockwell
@therealwineguy
liquidassets@eastlink.ca

There are a lot of grapes in the wine world. They number in the thousands. While some are variations on a single varietal, the majority are standalone berries — many of which never see a vine outside of their particular geography.

Some, though, are international superstars. Think chardonnay, sauvignon blanc and riesling on the white side, and pinot noir, merlot and cabernet sauvignon on the red side.

Cabernet sauvignon is arguably king. An accommodating piece of fruit, it's one of the few grapes that keeps its core taste profile intact when it travels. You'll find its classic blackberry to black currant flavours and typically oak-influenced power whether you're catching a cab in Bordeaux, France (where it originates) or Ontario's Niagara Peninsula.

Cabernet has had a love affair with California for decades. Famous for producing powerful, palate-pounding wines in The Golden State, the recent Cali trend is toward plump, juicier versions.

Trinchero Family Estates' 2011 The Show Cabernet Sauvignon ($17.95 to $19.99) is about red berry expression and balanced tannins. Though great with beef, it's a pleasing mouth full of wine without a real need for food. PRICES REFLECT THE RANGE ACROSS THE COUNTRY. SOME PRODUCTS MAY NOT BE AVAILABLE IN ALL PROVINCES.

An A+ for creativity

School lunch. Skip the tired ham-and-cheese sandwich and roll up this Any-Way-You-Want-It 'Sushi'

When it comes to school lunches, a little creativity goes a long way. MATTHEW MEAD/ THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

No, this isn't real sushi. It is a whole-wheat tortilla filled with meat, then rolled up and sliced into maki-style sushi rounds. It's fast, easy, delicious and healthy.

If you like, add vegetables (leafy greens and grated carrots work particularly well).

You can even accompany this with containers of honey mustard or barbecue sauce for dipping the "sushi."

Want to take this in a different direction? Substitute peanut butter for the cream cheese and a banana for the meats. Sprinkle in a few mini chocolate chips, then roll and slice.

1. Spread cream cheese evenly over one side of tortilla. Be sure to spread cream cheese all the way to the edge, as this helps seal the roll shut and keep it from unwrapping.

2. Arrange the meat (and any vegetables you want to add) in an even layer over the tortilla. Be sure to leave about 1 inch of cream cheese exposed along the edges.

Ingredients

- 1 to 2 tbsp cream cheese
- 8-inch whole-wheat tortilla
- 1 to 2 oz thinly sliced meat (salami, steak, cooked chicken or turkey, or deli meats, such as ham or prosciutto)

3. Roll tortilla and fillings into a tight bundle. If tortilla won't stay sealed shut, spread just more cream cheese along the edge to help glue it tight. Use a serrated knife to cut the roll into 1-inch rounds.

Reimagining Ratatouille into a grilled salad

Real ratatouille, the classic Nicoise dish, is neither grilled, nor a salad. It is a stewed vegetable dish consisting of eggplant, tomato, pepper, zucchini, onion and herbs.

Thing is, all of those ingredients would make a delicious salad, particularly if they were grilled.

Of course the dish needed to be deconstructed and reconstructed a bit, but the flavours and ingredients remain the same.

In fact, the smokiness and char that the grill adds makes for a nice contrast to the sweet vegetables.

1. Heat the grill to medium-high.

2. Using a paring knife, slice shallow slits into the cut sides of the eggplant halves. Drizzle eggplants with olive oil, then rub half of garlic and a sprinkle of salt and black pepper into the flesh. Brush the onion slices and the zucchini halves with a little more olive oil and sprinkle them with salt and pepper.

3. Fold a large sheet of heavy duty foil into thirds the long way. Open the foil. Place the tomatoes in the middle third of the foil, then drizzle them with the balsamic glaze and 1 tablespoon olive oil. Sprinkle with the herbes de Provence, the remaining garlic, and the red pepper flakes. Stir gently to combine. Fold the foil closed, crimping the ends to make a packet.

4. Grill eggplant, onion slices, zucchini halves, tomato packet, and red bell pepper (left whole) for 7 to 10 minutes, or until the vegetables are charred and tender, and the tomatoes are juicy.

5. Place the red pepper in a brown paper bag and crimp the top closed. Set aside.

6. Dice eggplant, onion and zucchini and place in bowl. When pepper cools slightly, rub charred skin away, using paper bag to assist. Cut pepper into strips, discarding the core, and add to the other vegetables. Pour tomatoes and their juices over other vegetables and sprinkle with the goat cheese. Serve warm.

"It's a wonderful opportunity to be able to lead a legacy," he told a news conference.

Knights get chance to knock on NHL door

NHL. Harrington, Maatta suit up for Penguins rookie squad as 4-team tournament gets underway at Budweiser Gardens

DAVE LANGFORD

Scott Harrington, left, has a sideline chat with Olli Maatta during Thursday's Pittsburgh Penguins-Ottawa Senators rookie tournament game at Budweiser Gardens. MARK SPOWART FOR METRO

Scott Harrington and Olli Maatta were Knights in shining new armour on Thursday.

A third former London Knight, Reid McNeill, wasn't in a Pittsburgh Penguins suit just yet, but he will be before the weekend is out.

The occasion was Game 1 of the NHL four-team rookie tournament being played through Sunday at Budweiser Gardens, and the three Knights defencemen are here as Penguins draft picks.

Harrington and Maatta played much of the game together as the Penguins dropped a 4-1 decision to the Ottawa Senators rookies in the afternoon game. Toronto and Chicago rookies played Thursday night.

McNeill wasn't on the ice but will play this weekend. The Penguins brought nine defencemen and only seven will dress for each game.

All three were happy to be included in the weekend's events.

"I was really excited about it, especially having Scott playing with me," Maatta said. "It's easier to get into the game with a partner you know. I was very happy when I found out."

Maatta said playing the tournament in London also made life easier.

"I feel comfortable being here. It's like my home. My second home," the 2012 first-round NHL draft pick said.

Harrington, a second-round selection one year earlier, was also happy with the pairings he first saw on the lineup sheet.

"It was kind of funny when we saw our names together," Harrington said. "It definitely made it a lot easier."

Harrington said he feels like he never left London and the Gardens. After all, he was in London two weeks ago for the team golf tournament and championship-ring presentations.

Meanwhile, he said Thursday's game was tough, especially removing the "rust."

"It's difficult in your first game after the summer break," he said. "Especially a high-intensity game like that."

McNeill, while in civvies for the game, was enjoying the scene.

"I think on Saturday night against the Leafs it will be a bigger crowd. I hope the fans will remember me," the sixth-round pick from the 2010 draft said with a smile.

While McNeill overlapped with Harrington, he didn't get a chance to play with Maatta on the Knights.

"I was traded for Olli so I never had a chance to play with him. It was the day before the (OHL) draft."

He will get his chance this weekend.

Away at home

Knights captain Scott Harrington wasn't impressed with his team's choice of dressing rooms.

- The Penguins used the visitors' dressing room while the Senators had the Knights' room.
- "They don't have it as nice as we do in the Knights' room," he laughed.

Murray meltdown forces quarter-final exit in New York

U.S. Open. Last year's champion loses to Swiss foe Wawrinka

After one set, Andy Murray slammed his racket into the court, then mangled it once he reached his chair on the sideline. After the second, he gestured over to his coach, Ivan Lendl, and let out a frustrated scream.

Stanislas Wawrinka had the U.S. Open defending champion in knots all day, and when the surprisingly short, less-than-competitive match was finished Thursday, Murray was a 6-4, 6-3, 6-2 upset loser in the quarter-finals at Flushing Meadows.

"I would have liked to have played a little bit better," Murray said after rushing off the court and into the interview room to explain the loss. "I've had a good run the last couple of years. It's a shame I had to play a bad match today."

Andy Murray reacts during a break. DAVID GOLDMAN/THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Ninth-seeded Wawrinka made his first Grand Slam semifinal, earning a spot in the final four for Switzerland that for so long felt like Roger Federer's birthright.

"It feels amazing for sure, especially here," said Wawrinka, who didn't face a break point over his 14 service games. "Especially after that match. He's the defending champion, he's a tough opponent."

Wawrinka will play the winner of Thursday's late quarter-final between No. 1 Novak Djokovic and No. 21 Mikhail Youzhny.

This was Murray's earliest exit from the U.S. Open since 2010, when Wawrinka also did the honours — that year in the third round.

Veteran Romo no longer the oldest Cowboy in Dallas

Tony Romo picked up more than a six-time Pro Bowl guard who can help in pass protection and try to revive a comatose running game.

The signing of 36-year-old Brian Waters this week means the Dallas quarterback is no longer the oldest player on the roster.

"I didn't know that but now I do and I am glad he's here," Romo said, smiling.

Oh, there are still plenty of signs that Romo is an elder statesman at 33 as he gets set for the opener of his seventh full season as the starter Sunday night against the New York Giants.

For example, receiver Dez Bryant found himself deflecting talk of an MVP season to his QB.

"I think MVP goes to quarterbacks because they're the boss, the CEO on the field," said Bryant.

♊ Gemini
May 22 - June 21
It will be so easy to say the wrong thing at the wrong time to the wrong person today. If you do open your mouth when you should have kept it closed, you should apologize quickly.

♋ Cancer
June 22 - July 23
According to the planets there is someone out there who is trying to make you look bad. Why? Because they are jealous, that's why. In a way, you should take it as a compliment. But watch your back as well.

♌ Leo
July 24 - Aug. 23
Expect a certain amount of criticism today, most likely from people who do not agree with your spending plans. Perhaps they have a point but they won't change your ways by going on and on about it.

♍ Virgo
Aug. 24 - Sept. 23
Plan every step carefully. You cannot afford sloppy thinking now, not if you are to move up in the world and become the mover and shaker you know you can be. Think and act like a professional.

♎ Libra
Sept. 24 - Oct. 23
Cosmic activity in the most sensitive area of your chart urges you to confront your fears. You can sweep your worries under the bed if you want but deep down you will know they're still there.

♏ Scorpio
Oct. 24 - Nov. 22
Before you commit yourself to a new plan, you must work out how much it is going to cost in time, effort and money. You may need help from family or friends. Ask and you will receive.

♐ Sagittarius
Nov. 23 - Dec. 21
You need to make a decision concerning your status and with Jupiter, your ruler, about to be touched by the Sun you can make it with confidence. Whatever it is you desire, the universe will give it to you.

♑ Capricorn
Dec. 22 - Jan. 20
Make sure you know all the facts about a situation, especially if it could cost you money if it goes wrong. Once you have signed your name, there will be no going back.

♒ Aquarius
Jan. 21 - Feb. 19
You may have been super confident yesterday, when the moon was new. But like the moon, your moods can change rapidly and you will want to keep it low key today.

♓ Pisces
Feb. 20 - March 20
Those around you may be lacking in confidence but you aren't and over the next 24 hours your talents will be in demand. Dealing with others' problems will take your mind off your own. SALLY BROMPTON
